The user-defined logic function may be defined using user-defined language or a hardware description language such as VHDL, Verilog, or the like. In addition, a PLD may be utilized to verify a logic design prior to the implementation of a particular circuitry using the PLD. Conventional design flows for PLDs typically involve implementation of a corresponding logic design using a target PLD, then sending the logic design to an external entity (e.g., a simulator), and then re-implementing the logic design using a "lite" version of the target PLD that is more efficient than the target PLD. This process, however, is time consuming and thus inefficient.[Role of cyclosporine in the treatment of post transplantation lymphoproliferative disorders].
